COFFEE TO THE FRONT. South American Exhibitors Push Their Products-"Mocha" and "Java" Myths. Chicago Evening Journal.

To the man with a refined sense of smel

there should be, in the early morning, before the sun dissipates the fragrance, a very appreciable and pleasant odor in the air about the north end of the fair grounds, especially in that section where the buildings erested by the South American republies stand; for there all day they roast, and grind and prepare coffee which has no equal of its kind in the world. Whether one visits Brazil's building, or Guatemala's, Costa Rica's, Colombia's or Venezuela's, the berry in its native state is found to be the main and staple exhibit. With unanimous consent these countries have pushed their coffee to the front at the world's fair. They know that the success of such pushing here will mean a great deal after the fair. It will mean that American and European capital will go down into South America in increased quantities for investment in coffee lands, and that American people will demand and pay for better grades of coffee than they have been accustomed to drink, after testing the coffee as it is made in these world's fair buildings. The latter consideration is one that carries a good deal of weight with the exhibitors of coffee. It is in order to give visitors an opportunity to discover what a marvelous beverage good coffee can make that Brazil serves it black and strong in her handsome palace; that Cost Rica has extended her quarters by placing an awning over the lawn beside her building and serves coffee under it all day, and that Guatemala has built a rustic arbor where conee may drank, hot or cold, from the hands of darkeyed Guatemalane. "I wonder," said a man who has studied coffee for a good many years, "whether Americans are really aware that they drink atrociously poor coffee. It is a fact that very little first-grade coffee is sent to this country. Planters and exporters in South America have repeatedly said to me: We send our finest coffee to London and Paris; second and third grades are good enough for the American market.' Rev. B. A. Kemp and family, of Misha- They are good enough because it is so long waka, visited Dennis Kelley and family | since the United States was willto pay a good price for people coffee that the their taste for it. The world's fair may do a little to restore the taste. But, some beople may say in reply to the criticism: 'We buy Java and Mocha from our grocers; you do not wish us to believe that South America can produce better coffee than those countries? Certainly not, but are people quite sure that they buy 'Java and Mocha; and would they be very much surprised to learn that this same 'Java' os 'Mocha' coffee that they purchase is, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, simply the second and third grade coffees of South America? That is a secret that grocery men may not always care to make known, but, as the fact was practically stated in a government report as long ago as 1891, it may now be considered public property. In a subreport from the Bureau of Agriculture in that year a paragraph will be found to the following effect:

As no cargo of Java coffee is recorded as hav-ing been imported into the United States during the last twenty years, nor any of Mocha for a much longer period, and as coffees formerly sold at retail under the names of Colombian and Venezuelan have in name disappeared from the stores, there is an inference warranted that the coffee still abundantly served to families under the names of "Mocha" and "Old Government Java" are identical with those shipped from the before-mentioned ports.

"That appears fairly conclusive, and warrants the criticism on the judgment of the American people in the matter of coffee." Those who drink coffee in the Brazil building will notice that it is, as they call it, "stronger" than that supplied to gueste in Costa Rica or Venezuela. One of the principles of coffee-growing is that a "rank" coffee, such as this, is the natural outcome of planting in low-lying countries, where heat and moisture force aluxurious growth.

The word "rank" is not applied in any derogatory sense, but applies also to Mocha and other coffees which are grown under similar conditions. In the higher altitudes of Colombia, on the slopes of the Andes, and in Venezuela the coffee grown is classed by buyers as "mild," which again does not detract from its worth, since Java coffee is in the same category. South Americans assert that, when the best of these coffees are selected, they cannot be excelled by the far-famed Mocha and Java themselves. With wise impartiality they give no preference to either, but suggest to all drinkers of coffee that they combine the two in the proportion of one-third of "rank" coffee to two-thirds of "mild." The former will give the body and the latter the aroma, both of which are essential, as all good coffee drinkers know.

ABOUT EXPENSES.

It Ended by the Bunco Man Coming Out Ahead of the Game.

Buffalo Express. "What," asked a little man who entered an up-town office abruptly, "is the greatest expense connected with your living?" The occupant of the office seemed surprised. "I suppose," he said, after a moment's reflection, "that it's a toss up between grab and beer." "No such thing," shouted the little man excitedly; "I don't mean expenses for food and drink. I mean other and semi-extraneous expenses, so to speak. Think, now, what is the greatest expense connected with your living?"

The occupant of the office wrinkled his forehead. At last he said: "Speaking semiextraneously, to follow your suggestion, I should say it was tobacco,' "No, no!" almost shouted the little man,

"It is not. I see that you don't know. will tell you. It is clean shirts, and collars, and cuffs, The occupant of the office looked sur-prised. "I don't believe it," he said, forci-

"But it is," insisted the little man, "and I'll prove it to you. Mind you, I mean expense that is unnecessary. Now, unless you neglect the commonest iaw of decency, you wear at least two clean shirts a week. You average six collars a week and half as many pairs of cufts, to say nothing of the other clean clothes that you wear. This is all wrong. The money that a man spends in this way can be saved. I know a plan whereby your laundry will last ten days after it returns from the shop and be as clean as when you put it on.'

The occupant of the office looked interested. "That would be a saving," he said. "Saving!" continued the little man, "it would be a godsend. The institutions that are sapping the life-blood of this country are the laundries. I propose to fix things so that all this shall be stopped. I will tell you this secret for $5."

The occupant of the office smiled incredulously. "I won't venture that much on it," he said. "I'll do it for two-tifty," said the little

"Too much." "A dollar?" "Halff" "Gimme a quarter!"

"Yep!" said the occupant of the office, "I'll play a quarter against it." He handed over a quarter. The little man clutched it greedily. "I have agreed to tell you a secret which will preserve your laundry in all its pristine whiteness for ten days after it has been done up," he said. "Exactly." The little man edged towards the door,

'Keep it in the bureau drawer and don't wear it!" he shouted, with his hand on the door knob. Hugh!" said the occupant of the offiwith a sickly smile, "that's a pretty low-down little bunco." The little man had slipped out into the hall and was making for the elevator. The occupant of the office stuck his head out and shouted: "Say!" The little man turned and placed his fingers derisively on his nose. "Say!" shouted the occupant of the office again. "I just thought I'd tell you that that quarter is lead.'

"Well," shouted the little man in reply, "there ain't nothing the matter with this silver inkstand I got on your desk.' Then he vanished down the stairs and the occupant of the office has been so cross ever since that his wife talks of divorce.

The Latest in Shirts.

Clothier and Furnisher. In the interest of the attribute that is rated next to godliness, the undershirt should be buttoned all the way down the front, and be put on and taken off as is a coat. Then 90 per cent., instead of 10 per cent, of undershirts would be discarded before retiring. It is a well-known fact that the open-front shirt, that goes on like a coat, is now largely worn by the denizens of swaggerdom, and that the Earl of Craven adopts this shirt. The merchant travelers, that live in sleeping cars half the time, must have these shirts, owing to the impracticability of getting into the regulation shirt in the confined quarters of a sleeping-car berth. The newest thing in coat shirts is the example with the doublebreasted effect in the skirt. There are several well-known high-class men's furnishers that make this shirt for some of the leading fashion-framers of Gotham. The garment opens in front all the way down, save that the skirt in front, like the doublebreasted waistcoat, laps over, and buttons down each side of the skirt from the waistline. The idea is an excellent one and finds new advocates as it becomes known.

Hotel Word. Clerk-What were you pounding on the door of No. 75 just now for? Bell Boy-To wake the man. He wante to go on the 6 o'clock train. Clerk-Didn't I tell you that train was five hours late? Bell Boy-Yes, but how was the man going to know it unless somebody told him!

Millions.

Although millions of bottles of These flavorings are without question the finest and purest of their kind manufactured in the world, and they will eventually be used as a luxury from one end of the country to the other.
